

AMERICA'S GREATEST WEEKLY.

THE TOLEDO BLADE,
TOLEDO, OHIO.

The Best Known Newspaper in the United States.

CIRCULATION, - - - 200,000

Popular in Every State.

The seventy-fourth year of its existence finds the Toledo Blade more popular than at any period of its remarkable career. It is now read each week by more than a million people. Its field is not circumscribed by State boundaries, but involves the length and breadth of the United States, giving it an unquestionable right of claiming to be the greatest national weekly newspaper in the country.

The Weekly Blade is distinctly a family newspaper. The one object of its publishers has always been to make it fit for the American home, for the fireside, and of interest to every member of the family. To fulfill this purpose it is kept clean and wholesome. The news of the world is handled in a comprehensive manner, and the various departments of The Blade are edited with painstaking care. The Household page is a delight to the women and children; current affairs are treated editorially without prejudice; the serial stories are selected with the idea of pleasing the greatest number of fiction lovers; the Question Bureau is a scrapbook of information; the Farmstead columns are conducted with the purpose of giving the patrons a medium for the exchange of ideas and information on farm topics. No department is neglected, but every feature is taken care of with the idea of making The Blade worth many times the price of subscription—one dollar a year. Sample copies mailed free. Address,

ANOTHER REASON

For Granting School Suffrage to Kentucky Women.

Children are not the exclusive creatures or possessions of men. Even in Kentucky they are not, since the action of the last legislature in passing the co-guardianship bill.

Of all the ridiculous political disabilities yet put upon women by men the most ridiculous is to say to them "on the one hand, Woman, it is your glorious privilege to bear and to rear children," and on the other, "But at the age of six years these children must be taken from you and put into the public schools of the state. There you may not follow them. It is no business of yours how these schools are managed, or what conditions likely to affect the health or the morals as well as the education of the children are there existent. This is a matter for fathers, not mothers."

As a matter of fact, it is particularly the prerogative and the duty of mothers to follow and watch closely the education of their children. In many families it is a necessity that this function be left to the mother while the father earns the bread. The laws which deny women a share in the management of the public schools were made at a time when conditions were very different from the present. In those days most children were taught at their mother's knee. Those mothers who could afford it supplied private governesses for their children; the others gave their children such education as they themselves had.

This condition no longer exists. Children are now being educated, not at home by their mothers, but in public schools, and it is as much the privilege and the duty of the mother to carefully watch and oversee that education in the public school as ever it was to guide it in the pioneer homes.

A Sex Duty.

Nor is it alone the duty of the woman who has children in the public schools to interest themselves in the conduct of these schools. There is a sex duty upon all women; the education of children is peculiarly a part of woman's work. There is upon all women a sort of race responsibility to see that the next generation is set a step forward in the slow struggle toward civilization. The mother who can afford to keep her own children in a private school should be willing to give at least a portion of her time to insure the fact that the school to which the working woman, the woman without leisure for public service, must send her children is in essential points at least comparable to that to which her own children go.

Even more is it the duty of the unmarried woman, or the childless married woman, to discharge, by service rendered the public schools of her community, a part of the race obligation which other women are discharging to a large extent by the nurture and rearing of their own children.

In or Out of Politics, Which?

It has been said that the effort to obtain school suffrage for Kentucky women was an effort to put women into politics. On the contrary it was an effort to take the schools out of politics. It was opposed by representatives of the cities who desired to leave the schools a political asset. It is unfortunate that "politics" should have come to have the meaning it has. The word is now associated with corrupt elections, violence, graft, ward politics, dirty politics—something that would be contaminating to women. It is high time that school elections at least should be rescued from such association; and there is no better way to do it than by an infusion of women voters.

We must come to a higher conception of politics. The word means really the carrying on of that public business on which private life depends in civilized society. "Politics," says Bernard Shaw, "is not something apart from home and the babies. It is home and the babies." Women have long since gotten into politics in Kentucky in the sense that they have labored for the passage and enforcement of legislation in the interest of the public health, for the protection of childhood, for the betterment of schools—for the preservation, in short, of home and the babies.

If Kentucky men want the children of Kentucky educated instead of illiterate it behooves them not to oppose the entrance of mothers into school affairs, not to oppose the working of a natural law that binds fathers and mothers to a joint duty toward their children. The violation of the motto of Kentucky—United We Stand: Divided We Fall—will explain the low place to which Kentucky has dropped in the educational column.

Why Towns Get Sick and Die.

Here is an editorial that has been published in many of our exchanges and is worthy of reproduction. We do not know where it originated. It says:

"More towns die of want of confidence on the part of business men and lack of public spirit than any other cause. When a man in search of a home or a business location goes into a town and finds everything brimful of hope and enthusiasm of the prospects of the place and all earnestly at work to build it up, he soon becomes imbued with the same spirit, and as a result he drives down stakes and goes to work with the same interest. When, however, he goes to a town where every one expresses doubt and apprehension for the future prosperity of the place, moping about, indulging in mournful complaints, he naturally feels that it is no place for him, and he at once shakes the dust from his feet while he pulls out with all possible speed for some other place. Consequently try to make a live, enterprising town in which you live. When you are working for your town you are accomplishing all the more for yourself."

If you are not satisfied after using according to directions two-thirds of a bottle of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, you can have your money back. The tablets cleanse and invigorate the stomach, improve the digestion, regulate the bowels. Give them a trial and get well. Sold by all dealers.

Be Honest and Save Money.

When I was a boy my mother taught me to be honest and save money. She made me work, which was another good thing. When I was earning 50 cents a day I saved half of it. No man can succeed in life if he spends all he makes. Frugality is a necessity in every man's life. Then I prepared myself for my work. Prepare is a word I like. Mr. Carnegie when he was a common blacksmith prepared himself; he worked hard; he did his best. I have no friends that I think more of than Mr. Carnegie. So it was with Mr. Hill. When he was a mud clerk on the levee in St. Paul, working for 50 cents a day, he prepared himself for his work. Then, too, he saved his money. His old clothes didn't make him any less a gentleman. Mr. Hill has told me that his only luxury in those days was books. I never met a man who possessed a greater fund of knowledge than Mr. Hill. He is a power in the financial world today. I should like to tell every young man starting out in life the necessity of preparing himself for his work. Then he must be honest and save his money.—Lord Stratheona.
